Paris, September 1.

'AS 'tis not to be doubted that the Tenour of the King's Will, which was delivered with great Solemnity to the Parliament the 28th past, is principally if not wholly to appoint what Persons shall have the Regency in case his Majesty should die during the Minority of the Dauphin; so 'tis taken for granted, that his Majesty's Intention in calling to the Succession the Duke du Maine and the Count de Toulouse, after the Princes of the Blood, was first to unite them in one and the same Interest with those Princes, and then to nominate them Regents with the rest. The Bars in the Arms of those two Princes are now taken out, so that all Distinctions between them now ceasing, they are put upon an Equality in their Order and Turn with the lawful Princes of the Blood. The Edict by which they were added to those Princes, was published a few Days ago, and the Terms in which it is drawn up are more expressive and significant than the Abstract given of it some Weeks ago by our Gazetteer. 'Tis as follows.

LEWIS by the Grace of God King of France and Navarre: To all present and to come, Greeting. The Affection we bear to our most dear and well beloved Son, Lewis-Augustus de Bourbon, Duke du Maine, and to our most dear and well beloved Son Lewis-Alexander de Bourbon, Count de Toulouse, induced us to legitimate them, and to give them the Name of Bourbon, by our Letters of the Month of December 1673, registred in all Courts where 'twas necessary: We have observed since, with intire Satisfaction, that they have rendred themselves worthy the Name they bear: The dutiful Regard they always had to our Person, the Zeal they had shewn for the Good of the State, made us judge them capable of being put into the highest Employments and into the Governments of the chief Provinces of the Kingdom: We likewise judged they ought to be admitted to the Prerogatives and Advantages due to their Birth, and therefore granted them in the Month of May 1694 Letters for claiming and taking, they and their Descendants in lawful Marriage, the first Rank immediately after the Princes of the Blood Royal, in all Places, Procedures, Ceremonies, and Assemblies publick and private, even in our Court of Parliament at Paris and elsewhere, in all Acts of Peerage that might be done; and for precedding all the Princes of Houses who have Soveraignties out of our Kingdom, and all other Lords of what Quality or Dignity soever; ordaining, that in all Ceremonies performed in our Presence or elsewhere, our said Sons the Duke du Maine and his Children, the Count de Toulouse and his Children, should enjoy the same Honours, Ranks, and Distinctions, which the Princes of our Blood have at any time customarily enjoyed, immediately after the said Princes of our Blood; which we confirmed to them by our Letters of the 20th and 21st of May 1711. But being desirous to confer on them still greater Marks of our tender Affection and Esteem, we think we ought to extend our Views yet further in their Favour, by making at the same Time such a Provision as we judge to be for the Good and Advantage of our State: And tho' considering the great Number of Princes of the Blood who do at present compose the Royal House, there is all Ground to hope that God continuing to dispense his Blessing on it, the Crown will remain therein a long Course of Ages; discreet Foresight does however require from our Love for the Tranquility of our Kingdom, to prevent the Troubles and Calamities that might happen in it, should all the Princes of our Royal House come to fail, which might breed Divisions among the great Lords of the Kingdom, and make way for Ambition to acquire the Soveraign Authority by the Fortune of Arms, or by other Means equally fatal to the State. The Apprehension of so dismal an Occurrence, which we beseech God ever to avert, moves us to secure to our Kingdom Successors who are already strongly engaged by their Birth to maintain it, and to nominate those on whom this Crown ought to devolve in time to come, if it should happen that not one lawful Prince of the Blood and House of Bourbon should remain, to wear the Crown of France: In such a Case, We judge that the Honour of succeeding would be due to our said legitimated Sons, and to their male Children and Descendants born in lawful Marriage, as long as their Races shall subsist, as being our Issue. For these Causes, and other good and great Considerations moving us thereto, with the Advice of our Council, and of our own meer Motion, certain Knowledge, full Power, and Royal Authority, we pronounce declare and ordain, by this present perpetual and irrevocable Edict, that if in the Course of Time all the lawful Princes of our August House of Bourbon should come to fail, so that not one should remain to inherit our Crown, it shall, in that Case, devolve by full Right to our said legitimated Sons, and to their male Children and Descendants for ever, born and to be born in lawful Marriage, observing among them the Order of Succession, and always preferring the eldest Branch to the younger, declaring them by these Presents, capable, in the said Case only of the Failure of all the lawful Princes of our Blood, of succeeding to the Crown of France, all others to be excluded. 'Tis also our Will, that our said legitimated Sons, their male Children and Descendents for ever, shall enjoy, as well at all Ceremonies which are or shall be performed in Presence of Us, or of the Kings our Successors, as on all other Occasions and in all other Places, the same Ranks, Honours, and Precedencies which are due to all the Princes of the Blood Royal, after however all the said Princes of our Blood. ---- And this because of the Honour and Advantage they have to be sprung from Us. ---- Given at Marly in the Month of July the Year of Grace 1714, and of our Reign the 72d. ---- Registred in Parliament the 2d of August.

'Some will have it that the Cardinal del 'Giudice is nominated one of the future Regents; 'but for this there can be no Certainty. Letters 'from Lyons of the 22d past give an Account, that 'the Queen Dowager of Poland left Marseilles the 'Beginning of August, that Her Majesty was received at Lyons (as she had been in the Towns 'on the Way thither,) with all Honours due to 'her Rank, by the Marshal de Villeroy, who went 'out on the Road to meet her, accompanied by 'the principal Persons of the City: Divers Persons 'having been imprisoned for the late Tumults 'there; the Wives of the Butchers, who because 'of a Tax on Cattle began those Tumults, went 'and met the Queen, and besought her to intercede 'with the Marshal in their Behalf: Being clean-'dress jolly Women, (as Butcher's seldom chuse 'Wives of a puny Breed) Her Majesty was much 'taken with the Appearance they made, and 'pleaded their Cause with the Marshal so well, 'that for Her Majesty's Sake he ordered all the 'said Prisoners to be discharged.
